Letters: A Look at the Past

How would you like to learn about the most strenuous times in this country's history through reading — not of a textbook, but hand-written passed-down and time-traversing letters, describing the trials of everyday American life under semi-nomadic conditions?

The Jordan family's journey from North Carolina down to the gulf coast area and ultimately to New Mexico, is highlighted in "A Journey of Voices", the latest nonfiction work by Diane McAdams Gladow. The Jordan family is faced with a harsh life of living in and traveling through Dixie and the newer southern territory, all while dealing with the immense uncertainty and tension of the American Civil War and the Reconstruction period which followed.

The Jordan family allows the reader to take this grueling journey with them through reading their personal letters to each other and to have an eyewitness view of almost a century of American life.

Diane McAdams Gladow lives in Emporia, Kansas with her husband. She has three grown children and three grandchildren. Gladow, raised in New Mexico, graduated from the University of Texas at El Paso, and then received her master's at the University of New Mexico. A former English Composition instructor and director of the Writing Center at Emporia State University, she is working on the next volume in the "Journey of Voices" series.

"Journey of Voices" (ISBN: 978-1-60264-530-1) is available in softcover from Virtualbookworm.com, Amazon.com, and Barnsandnobel.com. The book can also be ordered from most bookstores around the United States and United Kingdom. More information can be found at the author's website, Dianegladow.com
